

'We're all going on a summer holiday'

"... all the way to Cornwall. We would load the car the previous evening, before a pre-dawn rise, tea and toast, and the slog westwards to Cornwall."

"... the A30 regained it's importance at Upottery ... From here onwards, it was a very arduous trek through to Cornwall. Long slow convoys consisting of both caravans and lorries, kept the average speed down to around 30 mph, 40 at best."

"... Honiton and Exeter were infamous throughout the south of Britain as major bottlenecks on the route to the west."

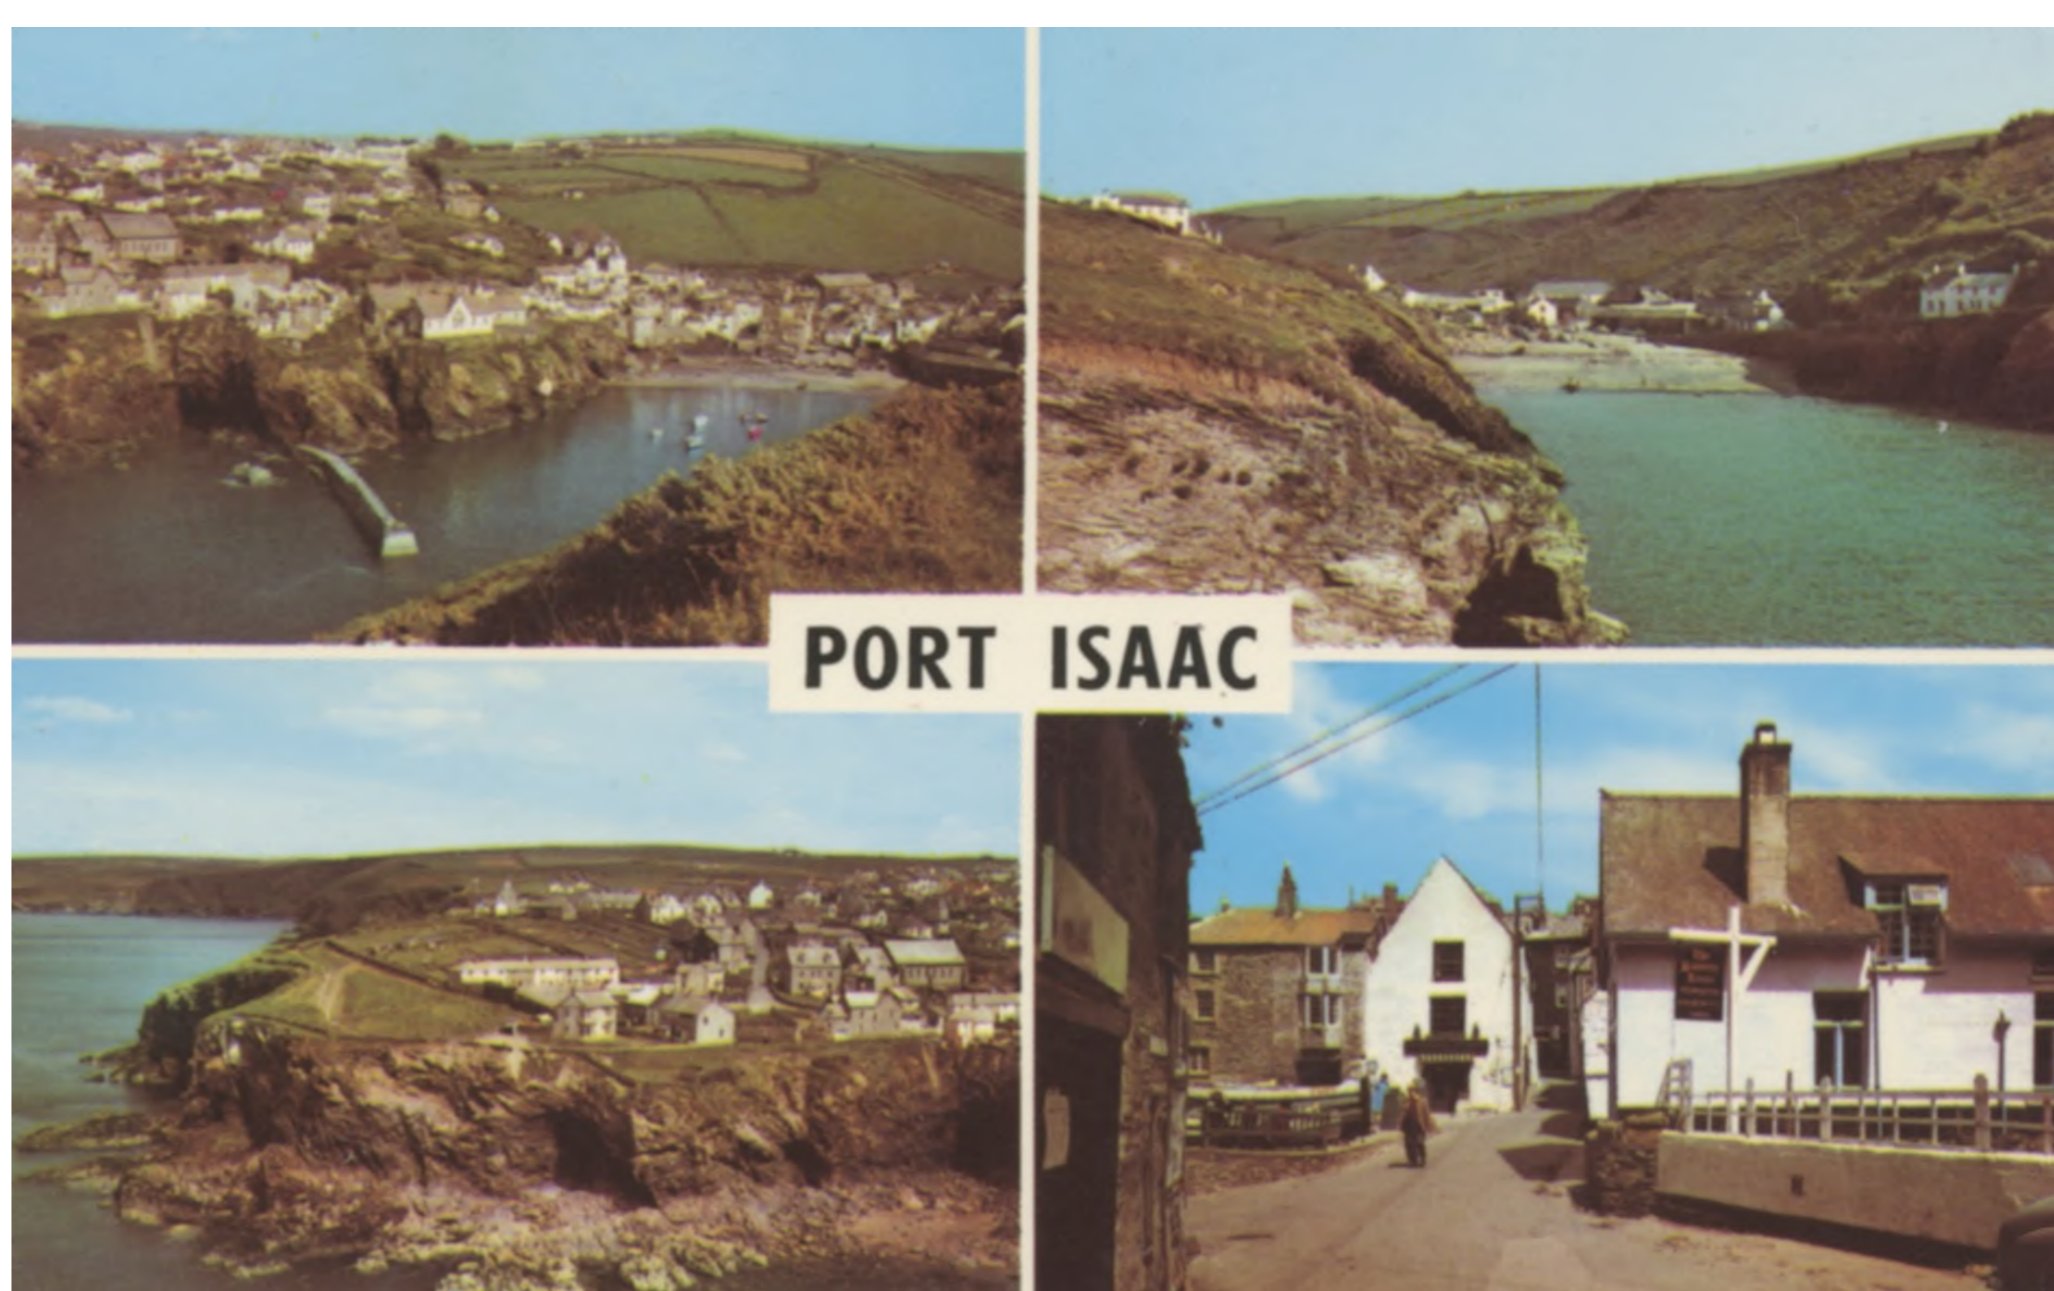

1972 - "... the farmhouse we are staying in is very old, parts are of an old monastery dating back to 800."

1962 - "Cornwall still has plenty of quiet spots, not yet discovered by the millions."

"Exeter though had to wait until 1977, before relief arrived in the form of the M5 motorway."

1969 - "... plenty of swimming and sunbathing and I am going haymaking this afternoon ..."

"Crossing over the River Tamar at Polson Bridge and entering Cornwall ..."
