

Hartland Road/Trewetha Lane

(probably named because of the view of the Hartland Lighthouse in the distance)

by Annie Philp

"My childhood was spent at 20 Hartland Road - Robin and Janet Hancock live there now. My memories of life in the house are ones of happiness and laughter. One other very important thing to me was being able watch the sea. My sister and I shared a bedroom at the back of the house and every morning we opened the curtains to look across to Tintagel. What a view! Sometimes the sea was angry and rough, water and spraying foam collecting on The Main. Other times the sea would look like a skating rink, as if you could skim a stone right across the bay.

Our home was always full of music; the radio with Mother singing along or our record player with our favourite tunes. We also seemed to be a houseful of children we three had brought home to play. Mum and Dad never minded how many were indoors as long as there were no squabbles. We had no television until the late 1950s but card games, board games and quizzes were always evening entertainment.

Hartland Road is still a super place to live I'm sure but with not quite as many children as there were. Politics and home ownership has changed our Council housing.

In the summer the view was watching the mackerel fishermen surrounded by diving seagulls. In the winter the bay was a haven for large boats to shelter until calm seas returned. The boats looked very pretty with all their lights on at night."
